

This one is our vision of Roxín Roxal's legend and of course the legend of Ponte do Porco.

Don Nuno Freire de Andrade, the third master of Pontedeume, had a beautiful and anxious so called daughter Teresa. He had also to his service the high, thin mild one and good formed of body, satisfied, blond and smiling to which they were calling Roxin Ronxal

. In so good esteem it don Nuno had that certain time gave him hi dagger of silver.

- defends with it your countess

- This way I will do it the effigy is made of stone and is a reclining figure, possibly a saint or noble, resting on a highly decorated base. The base features a series of arched niches, each containing a shield or crest. The effigy is positioned horizontally, with its head at the left and feet at the right. The figure is wearing a long, flowing robe and has its hands clasped in front of its chest. The background shows a stone wall and a small black metal chair.
